My name is Antoine. I'm from Texas. Well, I was from Texas. Now, I'm living in South Korea. I've lived here for three years now. I'd like to talk about my experience so far.
At first, I wasn't impressed. What happened was I felt overwhelmed by the number of people. Also, nobody seemed to care about the people around them. I felt like I was all alone. Also, I often felt awkward. There are a lot of traditions in Korea, and I didn't know any at first. I remember when I first got here, I wore my shoes indoors. One time, I tried to tip someone at a restaurant and he was offended. Now, I feel more comfortable. In fact, I love it here. Every day, I learn something new about this wonderful country.

Self-Driving Cars Are the Future

Self-driving cars are cars that drive themselves. They do not need human drivers to operate them. Supporters of self-driving cars believe the technology is safer than human drivers. They say the computer systems that are found in self-driving cars react to dangerous situations at much faster speeds than humans. Self-driving cars also don't get distracted or fall asleep behind the steering wheel. As a result, there will be fewer car accidents if everyone starts using them. On the other hand, opponents of self-driving cars say that the cars aren't safe at all. They fear that a car's computer can be easily hacked, causing the car to be driven in a dangerous manner. Opponents also say that self-driving cars are good in theory, but in practice the way the computers think is not similar enough to the human brain. No emergency situation is the same. Therefore, computers, which make decisions based on preprogrammed algorithms, may fail to account for every aspect of a unique situation. An experienced driver on the other hand, can take every aspect of a unique situation into account. The driver can then react in a manner that best suits the situation. Thus, self-driving cars can make poor choices and cause more accidents than humans. In the short-term, it is doubtful that self-driving cars will be used everywhere. However, the problems currently associated with them are only temporary and will be solved by developers. In the future, everyone will find themselves behind the wheel of a self-driving car.

1. What is one advantage of a self-driving car?
2. What is a disadvantage of a self-driving car?
3. Do you think the advantages are greater than the disadvantages? Why?
