C. Read the story and choose the best answers.The Eyes

When I was a boy, my father took me to the movies. Outside the cinema there was a statue of a famous person. It had the most beautiful glass eyes. I couldn't stop staring at them! When my father went up to the window to buy tickets, I looked around. I thought nobody was watching, so I quickly took the eyes from the statue and put them in my pocket. After the film, we went home for supper. At home, my father suddenly started to cry out. "Oh, my eyes!" he shouted. "I'm blind! I can't see!"

I couldn't understand what was happening to him. Then, I remembered the glass eyes in my pocket. I was terrified! Maybe my father couldn't see because I had stolen the eyes from the statue! I ran quickly back to the cinema and put the eyes back in the statue. When I got home, my father was quietly eating supper. His eyes were fine. He just looked at me and smiled.

There once was a man who had very weak eyes and could not see very well. One day, he was traveling along a road in the country. As he was walking, he passed by a black bird sitting on a stone. Because his eyes were weak, the man thought that he saw a person with a black hat standing by the road.

“Excuse me, sir,” he said. “Can you please tell me how far away the next town is?” But the stranger did not answer.

The man thought that perhaps the person had not heard him, so he spoke a little louder. “Could you please tell me how far it is to the next town?” he shouted.

Just then the black bird flew away. Still, the stranger did not speak. The man thought to himself, ‘If he won’t tell me anything, then I won’t tell him that his hat has just blown away!’ So he turned and continued on his way.
